Anti-Fatigue Pills Developed For Use During Exam Week

Black coffee or caffein tea, ammonia cokes, cigarettes, and other stimulants used by students in their efforts to get through the three or four periods are no longer contraindicated by the use of the new "anti-fatigue" pills which were put on the market only a few months ago by the Minnesota students of the same name.

Chief objection to the drug, which users claim will prevent fatigue or about 1000 pills will cure any resultant depression, is that its exact properties are not yet known. University of Minnesota scientists are engaged in a continuing study of the drug.
