Grand Canyon Still One Of Nature's Most Outstanding Wonders

GRAND CANYON, Ariz., April 9.—Grand Canyon, a mile deep, is not getting any deeper. The surface around the rim is rising—perhaps a few inches in a century—but the down-cutting of the canyon by the Colorado River is just about keeping pace with the elevation. Geologists believe that the water in the river has never been any higher above sea level than it is today.

One of the world's most spectacular scenic wonders, this is the deepest gash cut by Mother Nature on the surface of the earth. Nearly three million years ago have been to see it, since the Grand Canyon National Park was established in 1909. The north rim area, which averages some 1,200 feet high, is closed to visitors from October 1 to June 1, because of heavy snow. There are saddle-back annual trips through the Kaibab Forest, or to the inner depths of the canyon. There are hotel and campground facilities on both rims.
